FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL

Thank you for your letter of 18 May about the succession to Philip de Zulueta as Chairman of the Franco-British Council. I am sure that John Leahy is an admirable choice. I agree that we should hold on to the Prime Minister's message until the Council have decided whether to carry on the initiative started by Philip de Zulueta.

Franco-British Council

Sir Philip de Zulueta's death on 14 April left the Franco-British Council's British Section without a Chairman. The Foreign Secretary has appointed Sir John Leahy (cv enclosed) as new Chairman. This choice has been firmly endorsed by British Section members and Sir John Leahy took up the Chairmanship on 10 May. The Foreign Secretary told the French Foreign Minister of the decision when they met on 16 May.

The Prime Minister had signed, just before Sir Philip de Zulueta's death, a message of support for his proposed Britain-France Foundation. The Franco-British Council and the Foundation's Trustees will be considering whether this personal initiative by Sir Philip de Zulueta can now be taken forward. Meanwhile, we will, if you agree, hold the Prime Minister's message.

Some progress has recently been made over reinvigorating the Franco-British Council. We hope that the change in chairmanship will accelerate this process.

Yours,
Stephen Wall

Thank you for your letter of 17 June about Sir Philip de Zulueta's plans to involve the Prime Minister in fund-raising for the Franco-British Council. Sir Philip de Zulueta, Chairman of the British side of the Franco-British Council, has told us that he plans to approach you to seek the Prime Minister's involvement in his efforts to set up a Franco-British foundation. This foundation would be a charitable trust, one of whose purposes would be to provide financial support for the Council's activities (which are at present financed primarily by the FCO grant-in-aid of £60,000 pa). Sir Philip claims French support for this idea. His objective is to raise an initial endowment of £1 million from private sponsors by asking the Prime Minister to host an occasion for 30 to 40 leading industrialists, each of whom would be asked to contribute £25,000.

In other circumstances we would have recommended that the Prime Minister lend her support to an initiative to make the Council largely self-financing. But in this case we have serious reservations.

You will recall that last year the Prime Minister decided not to attend the Council's Cardiff conference. This conference was in any case subsequently cancelled because of the General Election. The Council, principally in the person of Sir Philip himself, continued nevertheless to remonstrate strongly with us over what they saw as lack of interest by HMG. We made clear to them that a Council which stood or fell by Prime Ministerial involvement alone was not the kind of Council we wanted to see. We were interested in a Council which was lively, active, promoted new contacts between the UK and France and had practical results to show for the resources devoted to it.

We have had some modest success in persuading the Council that they needed fundamentally to re-assess their objectives. They have decided to discontinue the kind of large conference which they planned for Cardiff, and instead to set up task forces to study particular aspects of the Franco-British relationship and identify ways of developing them. But progress in turning these good intentions into practice has so far been disappointingly slow.

/We

RESTRICTED & PERSONAL

RESTRICTED & PERSONAL

We have also impressed on the Council that it should not expect to rely entirely on its FCO grant-in-aid, but should actively cultivate independent resources (although one should not draw too close a parallel between France and Japan, Lord Jenkins' 2000 Group shows how much can be achieved by private sector initiative).

It has to be said frankly that many of the problems in the Council spring from Sir Philip's own chairmanship. Its constitution does not provide a ready means to remove him, though this probably could be achieved with sufficient support from other members of the Council. If this does not happen naturally, we may need to engineer it; but we would only want to do so if we had identified a suitable successor who would be willing to take on the job. Such a person would need to be dynamic, sufficiently senior to have the prestige required in French eyes and preferably would need to have an entrepreneurial background. We are looking for possible candidates. On the French side, the Chairman is equally unsatisfactory, but since he is a socialist senator President Mitterrand seems unlikely to make any change. We will however be reviewing the whole operation of the Council with the French Government in the autumn, and there seems to be a growing realisation on the French side that a radical shake-up is needed.

This background makes it difficult to recommend that the Prime Minister support Sir Philip's scheme. We doubt whether he has the energy and vision to carry it through. When he first mooted the proposal for his foundation, we welcomed his intention to go out to the private sector. He was talking then of directly approaching four or five key figures to see if they would provide the bulk of the money. His new proposal looks like an attempt to throw the main responsibility for drumming up support on to HMG (and no doubt to pin the blame for any failure on us). Given our doubts about Sir Philip, we do not believe that the Prime Minister should take this on: it would be much better for the Council to seek private sector finance on its own responsibility. The position would be different if the Council had stronger and more purposeful leadership. But if it did, it would be a lot more likely to be able to stand on its own two feet.

Dear Sir Philip

Thank you for your letter of 2 March.

I am very glad that the Council's Cardiff Conference is to go ahead; I am sure that you have made the right decision. As Geoffrey Howe has already told you, we take your point about the chance which these Conferences offer for the Government to reaffirm its commitment to developing relations between Britain and France. I am sorry not to be able to come to Cardiff, but shall be happy to send a message of good wishes to the Conference, and look forward to seeing you and Senator Pontillon after it. Please also let me know if you have any trouble in identifying a suitable senior member of the Government to speak at the opening dinner.

I am glad that you will be discussing with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office how the Council should continue and develop its work. You should be in no doubt that the Government continue to see an important role for it to play.

Yours sincerely

Dear Charles,

Franco-British Council

Thank you for your letter of 2 March, enclosing a draft reply to Sir Philip de Zulueta's letter of the same day to the Prime Minister.

Now that the Franco-British Council have decided to go ahead with the Conference in Cardiff, our interest is that they should work to make it a success. The Council will work enthusiastically only if they are confident of HMG's support: hence our efforts over the past month to reassure them that they still have this even though the Prime Minister cannot attend the Conference. The Foreign Secretary hopes therefore that the Prime Minister might reply in rather warmer terms than you propose. I enclose a draft.

Dear Prime Minister,

You will, I expect, have already been told that the French Section of the Council have now agreed to go ahead with the Cardiff Conference. This decision was substantially due to the helpful intervention of the Quai d'Orsay and the Matignon. The French are naturally disappointed that you and Geoffrey cannot come but I hope that we shall be able to achieve senior representation from British Ministers, perhaps with Quinton Hailsham or Willie Whitelaw speaking at the dinner on the first night. The kind offer of a message from you about the Conference and the Council's work generally was much appreciated, as was the suggestion that Senateur Pontillon and I might pay you a brief visit after Cardiff to report on the Conference.

I hope very much that you will continue to take an interest in the Council's work as your presence at the previous Conferences was so greatly valued and of such great help in maintaining French and, of course, British enthusiasm for the Council's work. I shall now discuss future plans with the P.C.O. to make sure that the Council's ideas are welcome to H.M.G.

Yours very sincerely

FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL

Thank you for your letter of 20 February about the problems which have arisen over the decision by the Prime Minister and M. Chirac not to attend the forthcoming meeting of the Franco-British Council in Cardiff.

The Prime Minister would be content to show support for the Conference by other means than attending it. She would, for instance, be perfectly happy to send a message and to see the two co-chairmen afterwards to receive a report on the proceedings. I have mentioned this to M. Bujon in M. Chirac's office, who thought that M. Chirac would be perfectly content with this procedure.

PRIME MINISTER

FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL

Sir Philip de Zulueta reacted intemperately to the news that you (and M. Chirac) would not attend the Franco-British Council at the end of May. This is entirely unreasonable, since he had no reason to believe that you would do so. Since the Avignon meeting we have consistently told him not to assume that you would attend. He didn't want to hear.

Still, we need to get him to simmer down. The proposal is that you and M. Chirac should both:

- a) send messages to the meeting;
- b) agree to see the French and British Chairmen afterwards, to receive a report of the proceedings.

This would be an elegant way out.

Agree?

20 February 1987

Dear Charles,

Franco-British Council

Thank you for your letters of 9, 12 and 16 February. The Foreign Secretary subsequently invited Sir Philip de Zulueta to call on 18 February.

There is, as you say, no reason why the Franco-British Council should have assumed the Prime Minister's attendance at their Cardiff Conference. You and FCO officials have repeatedly made it clear to both Sir Philip de Zulueta and Mr Hadley that her attendance this time should not be taken for granted. (Sir Philip did not dispute this in discussion with the Foreign Secretary, but claimed he had interpreted it as "understandable caution on the part of officials"). Both we here and the Embassy in Paris have avoided suggesting to the French that the Prime Minister would go to Cardiff, despite occasional indications that M Chirac would if she did.

There is also no justification for the Council's complaint that they were kept unnecessarily long without a clear decision: once the Prime Minister's decision not to go to Cardiff had been taken the Department warned Mr Hadley of it informally on the telephone and of the imminence of a letter to Sir P de Zulueta, well before the meeting with the French Section of the Council. Sir Philip's behaviour in reaction to the Prime Minister's letter to him of 5 February have strengthened our view, which we know to be shared by some members of the Council, that his attitude and style of leadership may no longer be in the Council's best interests.

/We

We have considered how to handle the present situation in order to avert the possibility of Sir Philip persuading the Council to cancel the Cardiff Conference, which he has called an extraordinary meeting on 25 February to discuss: or even to dissolve itself, alleging loss of government interest. Sir Philip suggested in talking to the Foreign Secretary that the Prime Minister might adopt some other means of showing support for the Conference; and we believe that this avenue may offer a solution. If the Prime Minister would agree to send the Conference a message associating herself with it, and afterwards to see jointly the Chairmen of the French and British Sections of the Council to receive a report of the Conference and of the Council's other activities, this would provide the earnest of high level support for the Council which they seek. We would ask M Chirac to join in sending a message and similarly to receive the two Chairmen.

I should be most grateful if you would let me have an early indication of whether the Prime Minister would agree to this proposal. If so, we should like to act on it before the Council's meeting on 25 February. The Foreign Secretary's meeting on 23 February with M Raimond would provide an opportunity to put it to the French.

I have seen a copy of Paris Telegram No 154 about the French reaction to the Prime Minister's inability to attend the Franco-British Council meeting in Cardiff. Monsieur Bujon (Monsieur Chirac's Diplomatic Adviser) told me today that he had informed the French organisers that Monsieur Chirac would definitely not be attending the meeting in Cardiff. He had been asked by Senator Pontillon not to give publicity to this for the time being. He had also been asked whether Monsieur Chirac would have any objection to an attempt to find alternative dates which might suit the Prime Minister better. Monsieur Bujon had said that there would certainly be no objection to such an exercise from the French side but it was a question for us.

It seems increasingly likely, therefore, that the Franco-British Council's approach will be to try to pin the Prime Minister down to an alternative date. As you know, this is not what the Prime Minister wants. It suggests to me that we should try hard to persuade the Franco-British Council to accept an alternative speaker, for instance, the Lord Chancellor or the Lord President if they happen to be available and given that the Foreign Secretary is otherwise engaged.

FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL MEETING IN CARDIFF, MAY 1987

SUMMARY

1. FRENCH DISAPPOINTMENT AT PRIME MINISTER'S ABSENCE.

DETAIL

2. SENATOR PONTILLON (CHAIRMAN OF THE FRENCH SECTION OF THE FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL) SPOKE TO ME LAST NIGHT ABOUT FRENCH DISAPPOINTMENT THAT THE PRIME MINISTER WILL BE UNABLE TO ATTEND THE CARDIFF MEETING OF THE COUNCIL IN MAY. SEPARATELY, CHIRAC'S CHEF DE CABINET TOLD MY MINISTER YESTERDAY THAT A ONE-DAY VISIT TO CARDIFF BY CHIRAC FOR THIS OCCASION REMAINED A FIRM FIXTURE IN CHIRAC'S DIARY. A FRENCH MEMBER OF THE FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL'S DEFENCE COMMISSION (WHO HAS BEEN ASSOCIATED WITH THE FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL SINCE ITS INCEPTION) ALSO TOLD WESTON LAST NIGHT THAT IF THE CARDIFF MEETING OF THE COUNCIL WAS NOT A MANIFEST SUCCESS, IT WOULD IN HIS VIEW SPELL THE DEMISE OF THE COUNCIL. OTHERS ARE BEGINNING TO CONSIDER THE POSSIBILITY OF POSTPONING THE MEETING TO A DATE WHICH MIGHT BE MORE CONVENIENT FOR THE PRIME MINISTER.

3. THE FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL IS THE MAIN FORMAL CONDUIT FOR HIGH-LEVEL NON-GOVERNMENTAL BILATERAL EXCHANGES WITH FRANCE, AND HAS SOME SYMBOLIC VALUE FOR THE FRENCH, PARTICULARLY WHEN SET BESIDE THE ELABORATE HIGH-LEVEL EXCHANGES THEY HAVE WITH THE FEDERAL REPUBLIC. WHILE THE ESSENCE OF THIS SORT OF NON-GOVERNMENTAL ENTERPRISE IS THAT IT SHOULD GENERATE ITS OWN ENERGIES AND INTERESTS, VISIBLE POLITICAL COMMITMENT BY BOTH SIDES AT THE BIENNIAL MEETINGS OF THE COUNCIL WILL REMAIN NECESSARY TO ITS CONTINUED HEALTH AND SELF-CONFIDENCE. IT WILL REQUIRE AN EXCEPTIONAL EFFORT TO PERSUADE THE FRENCH THAT WE ARE NOT BEGINNING TO DOWNGRADE THE COUNCIL AND ALL ITS WORKS.

Dear Charles Powell,

What you say in your letter of February 9th is, of course, true: it is also true that we have always carefully avoided saying definitely that the Prime Minister had accepted to come to the Cardiff Conference. Unfortunately, however, this is all irrelevant in the present circumstances. Preparations for Cardiff have been going on for the last seven months with the full knowledge of the Foreign Office and the Welsh Office, and, of course, of the French Government. As you know, these meetings were originally built around the concept of the two Prime Ministers coming to them and making speeches, thus giving public expression to their joint interest in Franco-British relations. It was, therefore, not unreasonably assumed on both sides that, subject to some quite unforeseen event, the Prime Ministers would attend, particularly our Prime Minister as Britain is the host country, and when Monsieur Chirac signified his firm intention to attend the general assumption was naturally confirmed.

What particularly distresses me about the present situation is that it makes the Prime Minister look both discourteous and uninterested when I know that she is neither. That is why I hope sincerely that the Prime Minister will find it possible to change her decision about Cardiff and agree to attend, subject, of course, to unforeseen complications, such as the calling of an Election in late May or early June. Should the latter event take place the Conference will have to be cancelled anyway.

I would have replied to your letter sooner but I had to go to Chicago, whence I am dictating this.

Yours sincerely,

The Prime Minister will of course reply herself in due course. I would only recall that my letter of 10 December 1985 to Mr. Hadley and my letter of 8 July 1986 to you both made clear that any decision about her participation in the next Franco-British Council Conference would have to wait until nearer the time, and could not therefore simply be assumed.

From the Private Secretary

9 February 1987

Jan Lynn,

FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL

I enclose copies of two letters to the Prime Minister from Sir Philip de Zulueta. The first, written on 6 February, deals with the arrangements for the Franco-British Council meeting in Cardiff. The second, dated 9 February, is a reaction to the Prime Minister's letter of 5 February explaining that she will be unable to attend the Conference.

Sir Philip's peremptory letter of 9 February has no justification. If you go back through the files you will discover:

- (i) My letter of 1 December 1984 to Colin Budd recording the Prime Minister's conclusion that it should no longer be considered indispensable for Prime Ministers to take part in meetings of the Franco-British Council and suggesting that Foreign Ministers should be regarded as the natural representatives of their respective governments.
 - (ii) My letter of 3 January 1985 to Colin Budd agreeing that the FCO should tell Sir Philip de Zulueta that he should not automatically assume that the Prime Minister would attend the Conference in future.
 - (iii) My letter of 29 November 1985 to Colin Budd recalling this position and saying that I proposed to reply in this sense to a letter from Mr. Hadley of the Franco-British Council. I did so on 10 December 1985.
 - (iv) My letter of 8 July 1986 to Sir Philip de Zulueta saying that any decision about the Prime Minister's participation would have to wait until nearer the time.
 - (v) My letter of 9 July 1986 to Robert Culshaw once again recording the position.
 - (vi) My letter of 4 September 1986 to Colin Budd noting that the proposed dates for the Franco-British Council were most inconvenient for the Prime Minister.
 - (vii) My letter of 19 January to you once again setting out the position.
- Jan Lynn*

In the light of all this, the Franco-British Council in general, and Sir Philip de Zulueta in particular, should have no reason whatsoever to have assumed the Prime Minister's attendance. In retrospect, it is a pity that we did not take a firm decision, as was recommended initially from here in 1984, that the Prime Minister would not attend in future. The timing of the Prime Minister's recent letter to him may also have been unfortunate, but I am afraid that we were not aware here that the French and British Sections of the Council were currently meeting in Paris.

I should be grateful for any advice which you may have to offer on how to reply to Sir Philip's letter. It would also be helpful to know what discussions the Foreign Office have had with the Franco-British Council about the Conference in recent months and what has been said in the course of these about the Prime Minister's attendance. Meanwhile I will send Sir Philip a holding reply.

Dear Prime Minister

CARDIFF CONFERENCE

Your letter of February 5th ^{at 11.0p} reached me on my return from a visit to Brussels today and has crossed my letter to you of February 6th.

I must admit that I was surprised and distressed by what you wrote. To start with the timing of your letter could scarcely have been more unfortunate since it was written on the very day on which (as the Foreign Office at least knew perfectly well) the French and British sections of the Council were meeting in Paris. At this meeting the French Section again assured us that Monsieur Chirac was looking forward to coming with you to Cardiff and had entered the date in his diary. The French Ambassador had, incidentally, confirmed this to me some two weeks ago. As I mentioned in my last letter, the two sections did agree that if an election was called here for the early summer the Conference would have to be postponed because British politicians would be unable to come and French politicians would feel inhibited. I am myself doubtful whether either the French or British sections of the Council will feel justified in putting public money and private effort into holding the Conference if the Prime Ministers are not prepared to come. You mention an alternative speaker to yourself for the dinner but there is no alternative to you. As you know, on these occasions it is not so much what is said as who says it that matters.

I have two reasons for feeling distressed that you are not prepared to come to Cardiff. The first is the discourtesy and apparent lack of interest which your decision, in my view, implies to the French. Britain is the host country on this occasion and you will recall the annoyance even of the French when President Giscard d'Estaing at the last minute sent Monsieur Barre to represent him at the Bordeaux meeting and also that Monsieur Fabius came to Avignon for the meeting even though his father had only just died. Even if Monsieur Chirac himself accepts that you have good reason not to come this time it will clearly be impossible to conceal from the French that it was you who first decided to stay away. My second, and perhaps more important concern, is that your decision seems to indicate a lack of British government interest in the work of the Council whose formation was, as you know, a British initiative taken when The Queen visited President Pompidou. Steady work to maintain and improve Franco-British relations seems to me and to my members of great importance - perhaps even more important for Britain than for France. So far the members of the Council have felt that their voluntary efforts were supported by all the political parties and in particular by the Heads of Government. Perhaps unjustly your decision will be taken to imply a lack of interest in our modest efforts and will naturally be so discouraging to our members, both French and British, as to call in question the usefulness of the Council - even though it is, so far as I know, the only government supported effort in the field of Franco-British relations.

The Rt. Hon. Mrs. Thatcher, M.P.

9th February, 1987

You will understand, therefore, why I feel that it is my duty to ask you to reconsider your decision. If you feel unable to do so I should be grateful if I could come to see you to discuss the matter before we have to tell the French (or indeed my own Council).

*Yours very sincerely

Dear Prime Minister,

CARDIFF CONFERENCE

We had a meeting of the French and British Sections of the Franco-British Council in Paris on February 5th which finalised most of the arrangements for the Cardiff meeting. I thought that I should perhaps send you a brief report at this stage as to where we are.

We are going to try at Cardiff to be a little bit more specific in our themes and to concentrate on what Britain and France could and should do together in a number of fields. On the Friday, May 29th, after an Opening Session we look forward to what is really the highlight and, in a sense, the main point of the Conference, namely the speeches by yourself and Monsieur Chirac at dinner. We had hoped that the Prince of Wales might come to the luncheon, but much to the regret both of the French and of the Welsh His Royal Highness has declined owing to a previous engagement. On the Saturday we shall divide, as usual, into Committees so as to give people a chance to talk and we are having six such Committees this time on: defence and security, foreign policy, industrial competition, energy and the environment, education and training, and European identity. I think this should cover most of the appropriate fields.

On Saturday evening Monsieur Raimond proposes to come to speak at the dinner and to attend the Session on the Sunday, and I know that Geoffrey is kindly trying to fit in with this arrangement. On Sunday, May 31st, Linda Chalker has kindly agreed to take the Chair at the final wind-up Session. So I think the programme makes reasonable sense and, of course, everybody understands that if an Election is called at that time we shall have to postpone the meeting.

The Rt. Hon. Mrs. Thatcher, M.P.

6th February, 1987

As you will know, this will be the fourth major Conference run by the Franco-British Council (Bordeaux, Edinburgh and Avignon being the earlier ones) and I should much like, after the Conference is over, to take a few minutes of your time to discuss how best to proceed in the future. I think these major Conferences have been of real value because, of course, they are the only occasions on which the British and French Prime Ministers normally have the opportunity of speaking at a joint meeting and emphasising their interest in getting on well with each other, or at least understanding the problems. But it may or may not be appropriate to continue with these meetings in the future, although if we do not I think that some similarly high profiled occasion at fairly regular intervals is really rather necessary.

Finally, I enclose a list of the new members just elected to the French Section of the Council. You will see that they have managed quite a good level of participants.

On a quite different matter, I just wanted to say how touched I (and of course his family) was that you made the time to attend Harold Macmillan's funeral. I shall miss him very much - his wisdom and his wit. He was a great man - and a great admirer of yours.

Yours very sincerely,

THE PRIME MINISTER

5 February, 1987.

Dear Sir Philip,

You were kind enough to write to me in July last year about the next Franco-British Council Conference, which is to take place in Cardiff on 29-30 May, and to suggest that I might attend. My Private Secretary then replied that a decision on whether I would be able to take part would have to wait until nearer the time.

I am very sorry to say that I now find that I cannot be present on this occasion. This is a disappointment after three enjoyable and interesting Conferences. But I thought it better to let you know straight away while there is still reasonable time to find another speaker at the dinner on 30 May.

I hope that the Conference will prove as stimulating as its predecessors.

With best wishes,

FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL

I have now clearly established that M. Chirac will, like you, not attend the Franco-British Council in Cardiff on 29-30 May. You ought now to warn Sir Philip de Zulueta that you will not take part. I attach a letter.

Agree to sign?

M. Chirac would nonetheless like to have a brief and informal meeting with you at some point between your visit to Moscow and his, which is likely to be in late May. Would you agree to my exploring the possibility of his coming over one day in that period for a working lunch, either at No. 10 or Chequers?

Dear Charles,

at Paris

Franco-British Council: Cardiff Conference, 29/31 May

Thank you for your letter of 19 January.

Both our Embassy in Paris and the Franco-British Council had separately been told by the French that M Chirac was planning to attend the Council's Conference in Cardiff on 29 May in the expectation that the Prime Minister would go. I think that, now that she has decided firmly against, it would be best if you were to write to Sir Philip de Zulueta, since if he heard of the decision by any other channel, he would in any case be likely to approach you for confirmation.

The Foreign Secretary is likely to visit Japan during the Whitsun Recess. It is not yet clear whether he can be back in time for the Franco-British Council. I should therefore be grateful if your letter did not commit him to attendance in Cardiff for the time being.

We shall also keep in mind M Bujon's proposal that M Chirac and the Prime Minister meet after her visit to Moscow. You will know that M Chirac also intends to visit Moscow in the spring, though we understand probably not before Easter. Since their last meeting was in Paris (at the Anglo/French Summit in November), it might be appropriate for the Prime Minister to invite M Chirac to Britain.

FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL: CARDIFF CONFERENCE, MAY 1987

I last wrote to your predecessor on 4 September last year, about the question of the Prime Minister's attendance at the Franco-British Council in Cardiff on 29 May.

As the Office will be aware, the Prime Minister concluded immediately after the last meeting that it should no longer be considered indispensable for Prime Ministers to take part in meetings of the Franco-British Council, any more than in Königswinter Conferences, and that the "natural" level of representation ought to be Foreign Ministers. The organisers were consequently told that they should not count upon the Prime Minister's attendance.

In addition, as I said in my letter under reference, the date is a most inconvenient one for the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister has now firmly decided that she will not be able to attend. I have informed M. Bujon, in M. Chirac's office, of this as a matter of courtesy. My impression is that M. Chirac equally will be unable to attend.

Clearly it would soften the blow if, at the same time as telling the organisers of this decision, we could say that the Foreign Secretary would be able to attend. I should be grateful to know if this is the case; and whether you would like me to write or would prefer to write yourselves.

I should add that M. Bujon said that M. Chirac would very much like a chance to meet the Prime Minister at some point in the late spring/early summer, after her visit to Moscow. We shall need to give thought to this.

PRIME MINISTER

FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL

We have to decide whether you should attend the Franco-British Council in Cardiff on 29 May. The French have indicated that M. Chirac will attend if you do.

My advice is that you should not attend, for the following reasons:

- (i) at the last meeting in December 1984, it was noticeable that the calibre of French participation was well below that of the British side. You agreed following that meeting that I should tell the FCO that it should no longer be considered indispensable for Prime Ministers to take part in its meetings. Foreign Ministers should be regarded as the natural representatives.
- (ii) the change of government in France does not, to my mind, alter this decision. Relations with Chirac are good: you had an unprecedented number of meetings with French leaders last year: will be seeing Mitterrand and Chirac at the European Council only a month after the Franco-British Council meeting: and will probably have to pay a brief visit to Paris in the summer to exchange instruments of ratification of the Channel Tunnel Treaty.
- (iii) you may well have a lot of other engagements at the end of May: you would have to make a speech: and the date in question is anyway in the middle of the Whitsun recess.

If you agree not to attend, it is only fair to give Chirac as long notice as possible and to try to present it as a joint decision by you and Chirac (to avoid any impression of a snub, or of us trying to downgrade the meeting in the face of French enthusiasm). I would like, therefore, to speak to Chirac's chef de cabinet, explain to him frankly what our problems are, and try to secure a pact whereby you both decide to stay away this time and leave it to Foreign Ministers, without prejudice to what happens in two years' time.

We don't need to take a decision now: we can consider in December.

But it might be possible to put 29 May into the diary pro Dear Charles, memo. It could always be combined with a political visit.

Franco-British Council: Cardiff Conference May 1987

We duly noted the Prime Minister's wish to postpone the decision on whether or not to attend the Franco-British Council's Conference in Cardiff in May 1987 until it became clearer who would attend on the French side. You may however like to know that M Chirac's office have told the Embassy in Paris that M Chirac would attend the Conference if the Prime Minister did so. The Embassy were careful not to suggest that any decision had been taken that she would do so.

You may also wish to note that the Council have now decided, in conjunction with the Welsh Office and Cardiff City Hall, that the dinner to which they are inviting the Prime Minister and M Chirac will be on the first night of the Conference, ie 29 May.

Der Doherty,

FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL: CARDIFF CONFERENCE MAY 1987

Thank you for your letter of 9 July about the preparations for the next Franco-British Council, to be held in Cardiff in May 1987.

As you will see from earlier correspondence a decision was taken in 1984 that it should no longer be considered indispensable for Prime Ministers to take part in meetings of the Franco-British Council. This stemmed from the Prime Minister's experience of the meeting in Avignon, where the French Government had been represented throughout at a significantly lower level than the British Government. The Prime Minister continues to believe that we should not automatically assume that she will attend, and I recently had an exchange of correspondence with Sir Philip de Zulueta in which I said that any decision about her participation in the 1987 Conference would have to wait until nearer the time. The prospect of the Prime Minister's attendance should not, therefore, be held out to the French Government as a bait to attract M. Chirac.

Dear Charles,

Franco-British Council (FBC): Cardiff Conference May 1987

 in fact the 8-11's*
Earlier correspondence about the Prime Minister's possible attendance at this Conference ended with my letter to you of 10 December 1985, in which I said we might wish to recommend her attendance if there were a new French Prime Minister who decided to attend.

The FBC have now started planning for the Conference. They are confident from contacts with the French wing of the FBC that M. Chirac will decide to attend and senior Quai officials also expect him to do so. Despite being told that they should not count on the Prime Minister's attendance they very much hope that she will agree to be present if M. Chirac goes, and that both Prime Ministers will attend one of the Conference dinners. We understand that the FBC envisage a civic dinner on the first evening (29 May) hosted jointly by the City and County Councils at which Mr Callaghan or Mr Kinnock might be guest speaker on the UK side. The FBC's initial thinking is to invite Mrs Thatcher and M. Chirac to a dinner on the second and final night (30 May) at a venue outside Cardiff - Caerphilly Castle has been mentioned among other possibilities.

The Council appear to be approaching the planning of the Cardiff Conference in a more workmanlike way than on previous occasions. They are establishing a steering committee to identify suitable topics for discussion, select appropriate participants to match the topics chosen, and ensure a better balance between the British and French participants. They will be seeking sponsorship and support from private concerns as well as from the local authorities in Cardiff. They are devoting particular attention to publicity aspects - Lord Forte has offered the services of his public relations team, and a number of senior journalists will be invited to participate in the proceedings. We believe that the overall result should be a better and more cost-effective occasion.

/We

CONFIDENTIAL

We recommend that the Prime Minister be consulted with a view to deciding in principle that, if M. Chirac decided to go to Cardiff, she would also do so. The Conference could provide a useful opportunity for a meeting with M. Chirac at the mid point between the annual bilateral Summits and, subject to confirmation of dates, shortly before the Belgians' European Council. There should be no problem in ensuring that any speech by the Prime Minister receives good media coverage.

FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL

A decision was reached in 1984 that it should no longer be regarded as indispensable for Prime Ministers to take part in the meetings of the Franco-British Council. The natural level of representation should be Foreign Ministers. The Council were therefore told that they should not automatically assume that the Prime Minister would attend in future.

We were told last November that the next meeting would be held in Cardiff in May 1987. The organisers were told in reply that we had noted the dates, but that a decision on the Prime Minister's participation could only be taken nearer the time.

Sir Philip de Zulueta's letter is an attempt to pin the Prime Minister down now by saying that Monsieur Chirac and the Prince of Wales are likely to attend. In fact, neither has yet taken a firm decision. Any hint that the Prime Minister was likely to attend would be used by Sir Philip to extract a commitment from M. Chirac and the Prince of Wales.

X | I propose therefore that we reply that it is still too early to reach any decision about the Prime Minister's participation. You may like to mention this at the diary meeting, and I will then write back.

I believe that during my temporary absence when I was taken ill last autumn James Hadley, my Director General, wrote to you about the proposed next Franco-British Council Conference, which is at the moment scheduled to take place in Cardiff from May 29th to 31st.

After your kind interest at the last three Conferences I hope that we can indeed count upon your coming to Cardiff as on previous occasions. Meanwhile, I thought that you might like to know that a senior member of M. Chirac's staff has recently told us that M. Chirac would be glad to come to Cardiff. He does know of the Council's work; he has indeed been our guest at dinner in London and has offered us the hospitality of the Hotel de Ville in Paris. Obviously this indication was given on the basis that both Prime Ministers would be present and, equally, on the basis of present knowledge of future commitments. However, I felt that this was an encouraging indication of M. Chirac's continuing interest in the Council, of which you should be aware.

Franco-British Council

Thank you for your letter of 1 December.

Sir Geoffrey Howe had himself formed the view that it should not always be necessary for Prime Ministers to take part in the meetings of a body such as the Franco-British Council, and that it would be natural for Foreign Ministers to represent their respective governments. His main concern now is that our presentation of this view to the French should be handled in the right way.

Sir John Fretwell's advice on the probable French reactions reinforces the view that we should move rather carefully. The danger is that to suggest to the French at this point that Prime Ministers should no longer participate would risk giving the impression that we are in some way dissatisfied with the Avignon meeting and wish to downgrade the Council. It would also run counter to the improvement in the atmosphere of Franco-British relations flowing from the Paris Summit. However carefully we explained the position, the French would look for some other motive (perhaps an intention to administer a reproof to Fabius) and would interpret our intention as a negative political move.

The next meeting of the Franco-British Council will not take place for 2 or 2½ years and arrangements for it will be in the hands of the British section of the Council. It will be at least a year before they begin to choose place, dates and themes; and this would be the time to tell the British Section that they should not count on Prime Ministerial participation. By that time too, we should have a clear idea in our own minds of exactly what we want these meetings to achieve.

We shall be talking to Sir Philip de Zulueta soon, to take stock of the Avignon Conference. There are a number of lessons including the need for new blood in the Franco-British Council and for stronger participation by French

/Ministers

Ministers, as Tom King has cogently pointed out. We shall also have a preliminary word with Sir Philip about the timing and possible place of the next conference. Subject to the Prime Minister's views, we would not propose to say more to him at this stage than that he should not automatically assume that the Prime Minister will attend and that that indication should be treated as wholly in confidence to him personally.

The Prime Minister has reached the conclusion that, with the Franco-British Council now well-launched, it should no longer be considered indispensable for Prime Ministers to take part in its meetings. In future Foreign Ministers should be regarded as the natural representatives of their respective Governments.

Clearly the implementation of this decision will need to be handled delicately and in close cooperation with the French Government. Can I remind you of my letter of 4 October, drawing attention to remarks made by M. Fabius on UK economic policy in media interviews (copy attached for ease of reference)? Although no further remarks of this nature by Fabius have come to our attention, we would maintain our advice that the Prime Minister should take advantage of the various contacts she will have with him in Paris and Avignon to seek to put straight the misconceptions about Britain which he seems to harbour.

I am sending copies of this letter, and its enclosures to Graham Sandiford (NIO), David Normington (Department of Employment) and Paul Pegler (Chief Secretary's Office, HM Treasury).

THE FRANCO-BRITISH COUNCIL

I Origins and Activities

1. The Franco-British Council (FBC) was set up by the French and British Governments after The Queen's State Visit to France in May 1972, with the aim of developing contacts between the two countries in the fields of economics, politics, culture and science. Small committees of leading figures in these fields promote, with the aid of a modest Government grant (a little over £50,000 per annum on the UK side) a programme of seminars and other activities (bestowal of Awards and Fellowships, arrangement of Exchange visits, etc). Recently seminars have covered Agriculture, Health and Social Security and Regional Development - a seminar to discuss the preservation of our respective National Heritages is under discussion. The Council's activities are coordinated on the UK side by a full-time Director (currently Mr James Hadley).

2. Since 1980, major conferences have been organised every two years (Bordeaux 1980, Edinburgh 1982). These conferences have drawn together a larger number of participants for more wide-ranging discussions of Franco-British relations than those in the seminars. The French and British Prime Ministers have attended part of each of the Conferences.

II The Avignon Conference

3. The theme of the Conference is to be "The Entente Cordiale - Where do we stand now", and the Conference will seek to examine the strengths and weaknesses in Franco-British relations today.

In preparation for the Conference, the FBC commissioned a survey by the BBC of attitudes of young people in Britain and France towards each other (the results were published at the beginning of this week and are relatively encouraging - 72% of French people found the English 'sympathique' and 61% of English people thought the French were 'nice'). Four committees will discuss Security issues (Franco-British cooperation in European Defence, the Atlantic Alliance and defence procurement); Economic cooperation (attitudes to extra-European competition and world indebtedness: obstacles to bilateral trade); social problems (a comparison of our approaches to the recession and the problem of unemployment) and Communications (ways of developing cultural and 'physical' exchanges).

Foreign and Commonwealth Office

FABIUS, LAURENT

Prime Minister since July 1984. Married with one child. Speaks good English.

Born 1946 in Paris, son of an antique dealer. On graduation from ENA, entered the Conseil d'Etat. Recruited as Principal Personal Assistant to Mitterrand. Socialist Deputy for Seine-Maritime since 1978. Official spokesman for the PS 1979-81. Ministre-délégué for the budget 1981-83. Minister of Industry and Research 1983-84.

Fabius is one of the star members of the new generation of Socialist Party politicians. He has a brilliant academic record. Before his appointment as a Minister he made a notable contribution in the National Assembly from the Opposition benches, particularly on financial and economic questions. Despite his close links with President Mitterrand, his role as Budget Minister was subordinated to that of Delors, the Minister of the Economy and Finance, with whom he was said to have a number of differences on policy during their first few months in office. His appointment to the Ministry of Industry, where he also covers Research, Energy and the PTT, was a mark of the high esteem in which Mitterrand holds him. In his first months in the job, Fabius faithfully reflected the President's view that nationalised industries should run their own affairs and that the private element of the socialists' mixed economy should not be neglected. This pragmatic, liberal image fits well with Mitterrand's apparent intention to move towards the political centre before the 1986 legislative elections.

The appointment of a young, energetic technocrat as Prime Minister was seen as a move by Mitterrand to recapture the political initiative after the Socialists' poor showing in the European parliamentary elections. No one doubts Fabius' intellectual gifts, nor his capacity for hard work - but some question whether he has yet had time to develop the political skills and strength of character demanded of a Prime Minister.

HERNU, CHARLES

Minister of Defence since 1981.

Born 1923 in Finistere. Studied law at Lyons. Journalist. Radical deputy for the Seine 1956-58. For part of this time Secretary of the Foreign Affairs Commission of the Assembly. Appointed Délégué Général of the Federation de la Gauche 1965, and Vice-President 1967. Member of Management Committee of the PS since 1971. Mitterrand faction. Won (against Communist opposition) the important mairie of Villeurbanne (near Lyons) in 1977. PS Deputy for the Rhone, 1978-81.

Hernu is one of Mitterrand's lieutenants from the days of the Convention des Institutions Républicaines. He staked his political fortunes on the Federation of the Left between 1965 and 1968, but the Socialists and Radicals never liked him and following the break-up of the Federation he was on the fringe of the opposition. His victory in the 1977 Municipals raised his stock in the party considerably. As the PS expert on defence affairs he was at the centre of the party's internal debate on nuclear weapons, favouring the maintenance of the French nuclear deterrent. His views have prevailed, despite some continuing opposition among the rank and file. As Minister he seems to have gained the respect of the Armed Forces, despite problems over the defence budget.

M. Hernu is rather reserved, despite a superficial fluffness. He seems quite well disposed towards Britain. He has been twice married. His present wife is a freelance journalist. Four children.

GATEL, JEAN

State Secretary attached to the Prime Minister with responsibility for Socio-Economic Affairs since July 1984.

Born 1948 at Vienne in Isère. Studied history, geography and economics at the Universities of Lyon and Aix-en-Provence. Secondary school teacher 1971-81. Member of Orange Municipal Council since 1977. PS Deputy for the Vaucluse since 1981. Secretary of the Defence Commission of the National Assembly 1981-83. State Secretary in the Ministry of Defence 1983-84. Member of the CERES faction.

Gatel first came to Bernu's attention as a student at the University of Lyon. He appears to have impressed Bernu by his work on the Defence Commission of the National Assembly. But his appointment as the Minister of Defence probably owed as much to Mitterrand's desire to bolster the Left's standing in the Vaucluse (where the Socialists did badly in the 1983 municipal elections) as to Gatel's competence as a defence specialist. He has made little public impact as a Minister.

Remarried. Two children.

KELLER, JEAN

Prefet, Commissaire de la République du Vaucluse since early 1984. Born 1921 in Germany, the son of a General. He graduated in law from Toulouse University. His career has been throughout in the prefectural service and includes a term in Guadeloupe (1960-64) and five years in the office of the Minister responsible for French Overseas Departments and Territories (DOMTOM) 1964-69.

Monsieur Keller has served as sous-prefet in several regions of France (Condom, Vichy, Alès) and was prefet in the Pyrénées-Orientales (from 1982) before moving to Avignon.

Married with one daughter and two sons, Monsieur Keller is something of a connoisseur of wine : he hails from Cahors and is fond of the local wine (the grape harvest in the Cahors area has been severely damaged by the weather this year). Madame Keller is said to be fond of dogs.

ROUX, JEAN-PIERRE

Mayor of Avignon.

Born 1938. Monsieur Roux, who is an engineer by profession, is an RPR member and a friend of Monsieur Chirac. He is a member of the European Parliament. He seems to be not very often in Avignon, but spends a lot of time in Paris. He is well disposed towards the United Kingdom. Married with two children. He is an enthusiast of the Vaucluse and was Deputé for the region from 1968 to 1973.

PONTILLON, ROBERT

President of the French Section of the Franco-British Council.

Born 1921 in Paris. Deported by the Germans to Czechoslovakia. Studied law at the University of Paris. Journalist on various Socialist papers. Cabinet of the Junior Minister for Information 1956-57; and the Minister for Overseas Territories 1957. Director General of the Office de Coopération Radiophonique 1962-63. Director of education television in the Thomson Houston Company since 1964. Member of the Management Committee of the Socialist Party since 1963. Mayor of Suresnes 1965-83. Conseiller Général for Suresnes since 1967. PS National Secretary for International Relations 1971-79. PS Senator for Hauts-de-Seine since 1977. President of the French Section of the Franco-British Council since 1981.

Pontillon is agreeable and well-disposed, but notably pleased with himself. As PS National Secretary for International Relations he was regarded as being on the right of the party on account of his "Atlanticist" views and contacts with the Social Democratic Parties of Northern Europe. He no longer carries much weight in the Party, particularly since the departure of Mauroy, to whom he remains close.

Married. One son. His wife, who is a former member of the Executive Bureau of the PS, was Mauroy's Private Secretary at the Matignon. Both Pontillons speak good English.

ZULEETA, Sir Philip de

Chairman, British Section, Franco-British Council since 1981.

Born 1925. New College, Oxford (MA). Welsh Guards (1943-47). Foreign Service 1949. Moscow 1950-52. Private Secretary to successive Prime Ministers (Lord Avon, Mr MacMillan, Sir A Douglas-Home) 1955-64. Assistant Secretary, HM Treasury, 1962. Resigned from Foreign Service, 1964. Director, subsequently Chief Executive and Chairman, Hill Samuel 1965-81. Chairman Tanks Consolidated Investments Ltd, since 1983.

Member of FBC since its inception in 1972. Former member of BBC Advisory Council. Member of CBI Council and Director of a number of industrial and financial companies.

Married, two children.

26 November 1984

From Thursday to Saturday last week I went to Brussels for the Annual Conference of the Centre for European Policy Studies (CEPS) Annual Conference. They had asked me to give a paper on Armaments Collaboration (Kenneth Macdonald has a copy). The Joint Chairmen were Leo Tindermans and Jean Francois-Poncet. Garrett Fitzgerald spoke at the opening dinner. There was a number of present and past European politicians present (none British), plus professional conference goers, academics, people from the Commission etc., a few industrialists and some non-Europeans.

The keynote address was given by Valery Giscard d'Estaing. I enclose his text. The last couple of pages concern his defence propositions - the need for a European defence identity; regular meetings of Defence Ministers and Chiefs of Staff; a joint defence research programme including a surveillance satellite; a joint (France, Italy, Britain) intervention force; agreement between France and Britain on a common approach to their nuclear forces with prior Franco-German consultation; then a European strategic nuclear force which would require political union of some kind.

A good deal of rubbish - unexplained! In general the French in particular were pushing hard for closer European Defence collaboration both in terms of policy (i.e. a European identity) and armaments. On the latter they eventually accepted - I think - that the right forum was the IEPG. They would have wished it to be Western Union (WEU).

I think we needed to be very careful about WEU. Quite a number of the French wanted to go back to the 1950's. There were some quite strong passages of arms when I pointed out that both the Northern and Southern Flanks were very important, that WEU mishandled could become divisive, and that we should not present the Soviets with opportunities to neutralise the Northern Flank countries and cause even more trouble than exists already in the South. Francois-Poncet was at one time talking about inviting other countries being asked later to join WEU provided they passed tests such as willingness to have nuclear weapons on their territory. The French accepted that the WEU defence obligations were automatic though rejecting NATO automaticity.

Sir Clive Whitmore KCB CVO

26 November 1984

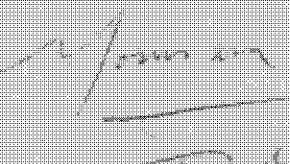

We are back at the old question of "What is Europe" and some of the French re-writing history. One reason is the genuine French popular support for Europe and another put forward was WEU represents a means of changing French defence policies. Franco-German defence relationships (particularly nuclear) are quite difficult and the French are trying to con the Germans to pay for better French conventional forces.

There is also the fact that the French are in real resource trouble over the weapons programme (should we not make more of the fall from grace of their defence industry? e.g. the large losses of Aerospatiale and the vast increase in borrowings). Incidentally, I found a marvellous quote from Hernu speaking recently to the Association of European Aerospace Contractors when he said - speaking about collaboration and the European Fighter Aircraft "...one must be willing and vigilant. Willing to have European co-operation, and at the same time vigilant on behalf of our industry". I read it out!

The risk is that the search for a European identity and the pressure in favour of WEU could cause divisions and disunity and produce opportunities for the USSR on both Flanks.

For the rest there was much said about the need for the reform of the Community (strengthening the role of the President, majority voting etc.); 1985 to be the year of the ECU; tackling unemployment; reforming industry; and lifting discussion to a higher plane.

A copy goes to Antony Acland. No reply needed. It will be interesting to see what happens at Avignon this weekend.

ANGLO-FRENCH SUMMIT

Thank you for your minute about your talk with the French Ambassador. The Prime Minister will want to know the views of the Home Secretary and the Trade and Industry Secretary on whether they should attend or, in the case of Mr. Tebbit, be represented.

Anglo-French Summit

During the course of a farewell visit this afternoon, the French Ambassador referred briefly to arrangements for the Anglo-French Summit, and in particular to Ministerial attendance.

2. He said that he understood that the Prime Minister would be accompanied by the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretary of State for Defence and the Minister of Agriculture. He had heard that the Secretary of State for Energy might also be in the party. He enquired about a representative of the Department of Trade and Industry. I said that I thought that, in the absence of Mr Tebbit, either Mr Lamont or Mr Channon might come. The Ambassador clearly hoped that the Minister for Trade would come: he thought that Madame Cresson would welcome exchanges with her counterpart.

3. The Ambassador said that he had heard that the Home Secretary might come. I said that it might well be useful that the Home Secretary should discuss with the Minister for the Interior questions of counter-terrorism. The Ambassador suggested that, if the Home Secretary did come, it would be impossible to avoid some discussion of the contretemps between the two police services at the time of President Mitterrand's State Visit. The Ambassador then went into a long speech, at the conclusion of which he said that, as a result of his own investigation and discussions of the matter, he had come to the conclusion that one could not take as completely truthful either police service's account of the matter. Clearly, however, feelings had run high on both sides. If the Home Secretary came, he hoped that it would be possible to deal with this subject briefly by saying that there had been genuine misunderstandings between the two police services, and that now what was important was to put those misunderstandings into the past and to concentrate on improving relations between the two police services in the pursuit of co-operation against international crime and terrorism.

4. I am sending a copy of this minute to the Private Secretary to the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary.

Franco-British Council

Thank you for your letter of 9 November about the arrangements for the Franco-British Council meeting in Avignon.

The Prime Minister will wish to leave Paris as soon as feasible after the end of the Summit (I am not clear whether the press conference is likely to be before or after lunch). Certainly she would not wish to arrive at Orange later than 1800 hours.

The Prime Minister would be happy to meet M. Fabius in Avignon if there is not a suitable occasion to do so in Paris.

The Prime Minister's party from Paris to Avignon will consist of me, Bernard Ingham, one Duty Clerk, one PA

There should therefore be room for Sir J. Fretwell.

I agree that there will be no need for Mr. Lederer to come to Avignon.

Dear Charles,

Franco-British Council Conference

We have been giving thought to transport and accommodation arrangements for the Prime Minister's visit to Avignon to address the Franco-British Council Conference on Friday 30 November, about which you wrote on 15 October.

We have suggested to the French that the Summit meeting should end after lunch on the Friday, and expect them to agree. We therefore think it would be best, as suggested in Roger Bone's letter of 8 June, to take a late afternoon flight from Paris to the military airfield at Orange. The flight would take 1 hr and 10 mins in an HS125.

I suggest that, in order to allow some time to change before dinner, (which is timed to start with a reception at 2000 hrs) the Prime Minister should aim to arrive at Orange by 1800.

The French have confirmed to us that M. Fabius will attend the dinner. It is possible that he may suggest a meeting at Avignon beforehand, if the two Prime Ministers have not had an opportunity for private conversation during the Summit. If this is confirmed we would recommend that the Prime Minister agree and arrive at Orange, if necessary, a little earlier.

The dinner will take place at the Palais des Papes. You told me in your letter of 15 October that the Prime Minister would accept the Prefet's invitation to stay the night. We have asked for a Security Officer and a Private Secretary also to be accommodated at the Prefecture - any other members of the Party will be booked into a nearby hotel.

I enclose the conference programme and provisional lists of British and French delegates. Owing to the pressure of his other commitments Sir Geoffrey is not planning to attend the Conference. However Mr Hurd, Mr King, Mr Rees and Lady Young are planning to attend - Mr Hurd will make a speech at the Saturday evening dinner - and it is likely that they will all be present on the Friday evening.

RESTRICTED

You said that the Prime Minister would use an HS125 for the journey from Paris to Avignon. We would hope that there would be room in this for Sir John Fretwell; he will have to stay in Paris until the conclusion of the Summit meeting and would find it difficult to arrive in Avignon in time to be available before the dinner by any means other than the Prime Minister's aircraft. There will however be a few places available on the special flight arranged from Paris for the French delegation to the conference, for those who will not be required in Paris later than 10 am on the Friday morning; I would be grateful if you could let me know if anyone in the Prime Minister's party wishes to travel on this flight.

M. Fabius speaks good English and there will be interpreters available at the dinner to translate the speeches and assist as needed. The Prime Minister may therefore feel that Mr Lederer need not accompany her to Avignon.

The Prime Minister proposes to make the following overseas journeys:-

2 November 1984	Germany, to attend an Anglo-German Summit
29 November-1 December	France, for Anglo-French bilateral talks and a Franco-British Council meeting

Anglo-French Summit, Paris; Franco-British Council, Avignon

29 November - 2 December

Thank you for your letter of 11 October.

I agree that it would be helpful for two Conference Officers to assist the Embassy in Paris and the authorities in Avignon.

I should say that I have also had some discussion of the Avignon part of the visit with Sir Philip de Zulueta of the Franco-British Council. I understand that he has made a reconnaissance of Avignon with the Consul-General of Marseilles. On the basis of his report, the Prime Minister has agreed to accept the Préfet's invitation to stay the night in Avignon, returning to London early the next morning. The Prime Minister therefore intends to leave Paris in an HS 125 with a very small party for the visit to Avignon, leaving the main body of those attending the Anglo-French Summit to return to London in the Andover.

Dear Charles,

Anglo-French Summit, Paris; Franco-British Council, Avignon
29 November - 2 December

The administrative arrangements for the Anglo-French Summit in Paris followed by the Franco-British Council meeting in Avignon from 29 November to 2 December are likely to be complicated, given that there will be overnight stops in both places, and Private Offices and communications arrangements to organise.

We propose therefore that two Conference Officers should travel out from London to assist the Embassy in Paris, one then going on to Avignon. The Embassy have welcomed the suggestion.

I should be grateful for confirmation that you agree. The Conference Officers would be Pat Noble and Bette Davis.

Yours ever,

FRANCO/BRITISH COUNCIL CONFERENCE

You have agreed to address the Franco/British Council Dinner in Avignon on Friday, 30 November, following straight on from the Anglo/French Summit. The question arises whether you want to spend the night in Avignon after the dinner. I think you should do so, since the dinner is unlikely to end much before 1130 p.m. You could then fly back early on the Saturday morning to London (and set out again for the Dublin European Council on the Sunday evening or Monday morning).

Sir Philip de Zulueta and the Consul in Marseilles have done a reconnaissance at Avignon and recommend that you accept an invitation from the Local Prefet to spend the night. Apparently he has a very fine house in the centre of Avignon with room for a Private Secretary and detective.

Agree to spend the night and accept the hospitality of the Prefet?

Notes

Ann Hutchinson rang with a very long message for you about interpreters.

Mrs Fairweather, who you discussed, is thought to be excellent, being fluent in several languages. She is recommended by Michael Palfrey. Her PV clearance has not yet been completed however. (She is, by the way, 42 years old).

Mrs M. Dennis (65) is an alternative who has been PV'd. She has been employed in ministerial translation since 1979 and is thought to be very good. She did the ministerial interpretation at the Anglo-French summit of October 1983, and interpreted for the PM when she met Kibisi in February 1984.

Another alternative is Mrs Taylor (56) who is also very good, is PV'd, and has been involved in ministerial interpretation since 1979. She interpreted for the PM during the PM of Guinea's courtesy call.

Mrs Fairweather seems to be Ann Hutchinson's no. 1 choice (I got the impression, at least). We have no security reservations about her, though her availability is in question.

You wrote to my predecessor, John Coles, on 14 May concerning the Prime Minister's attendance at the meeting of the Franco-British Council in Avignon on Friday 30 November.

The Prime Minister would in principle be happy to accept an invitation to attend the Council on that date, on the understanding that the French Prime Minister would also attend. She also agrees to deliver a speech at dinner that evening.

It has not yet been possible to discuss the transport and accommodation arrangements. I am advised that the military airport at Orange is likely to be the most suitable for the Prime Minister's aircraft. I think it highly likely that she will wish to spend the night in Avignon, returning to the UK the following morning. But perhaps I could be in touch with you about the details rather nearer the time.

Franco-British Council

In your letter of 18 May you asked for advice on whether the Prime Minister should attend the Franco-British Council's Conference at Avignon on 30 November and make a speech.

We recommend that the Prime Minister should accept the Council's invitation. These conferences, held every two years, gather together eminent French and British people from a variety of fields including politics, business, journalism and the academic world. The Prime Minister attended the last two conferences at Bordeaux in 1980 and Edinburgh in 1982. The dinner on the opening night of the conference would provide a good opportunity for her to make a substantial speech on Franco-British relations or on another subject of her choice. Attendance on the Friday evening would seem to be the most convenient. We suggest, however, that it should be made clear that the Prime Minister's agreement to attend is made on the understanding that the French Prime Minister will attend also, as in 1982 and 1980.

You asked for advice on the questions about transport in the third paragraph of Sir Phillip's letter. We have yet to receive final confirmation from the French that the Summit will take place in Paris, and that it will end after lunch on the Friday. But assuming that it does it would probably be best for the Prime Minister to fly down to Avignon on the Friday afternoon. According to our Embassy in Paris, the most convenient airfield to use would be the military one at Orange, some 30 kilometres north of Avignon. Avignon airport itself is extremely small and would probably not be suitable for an Andover. Marseilles, as Sir Philip points out, is considerably further away.

If the Prime Minister accepts the invitation, you will also wish to consider whether the Prime Minister should accept the offer of hospitality by the local Prefect. It would have the advantage of avoiding a journey late at night at a time of year when the weather can be very unreliable.

The Foreign Secretary has, as indicated in Sir Philip's letter, received a separate letter inviting him to address the conference on the Saturday evening. He proposes to send a holding reply. It is likely that Sir Geoffrey Howe will ask another Foreign Office Minister to attend in his place, but this will depend to some extent on whether M. Cheysson (or M. Dumas) attends. He would of course be available to 14th May, 1984.

Dear John,

Now that, as you kindly told me, the Franco British Summit dates in the autumn have been agreed, Senateur Pontillon was able to confirm to me over the weekend that the next main meeting of the Franco British Council will take place in Avignon from Friday November 30 to Sunday December 2.

As we have discussed, the Council, of course, very much hope that the Prime Minister and M. Mauroy will be able, as on previous occasions, to come to the Conference. Our suggestion would be that the Prime Minister should come down from Paris to Avignon in the afternoon of Friday November 30, since I believe that I am right in saying that the Summit meetings normally finish after lunch. If this would suit the Prime Minister the Council would suggest the two Prime Ministers might perhaps come to the Palais des Papes in Avignon (where the dinner and meeting will take place) at 7.45 p.m. so as to allow participants a chance to be presented before dinner at 8.30 p.m. The Council would hope that the Prime Minister would be prepared to make a speech during the dinner. Of course if the Prime Minister would prefer to come to the Conference at some later time, for example on the Saturday, the Council could easily rearrange the programme but I believe that the Friday night would seem the most sensible on the basis that the Prime Minister could then return to the U.K. for the weekend if she so wished.

I should be most grateful if you could ascertain the Prime Minister's wishes in this matter. I would also be very grateful to know whether you would expect her to fly down to Avignon (which implies not using a large aircraft) or whether she would be more likely to fly to Marseilles which allows a larger aircraft to land but is, of course, much further. Monsieur Pontillon has also asked me if the Prime Minister would be likely to wish to stay the night of Friday November 30 or whether she would return to the U.K. after dinner. We would, of course, be delighted if the former was the case and I understand the Prefect would be likely to offer hospitality.

I should perhaps add that I am also going to ask whether the Foreign Secretary would be prepared to address the Conference at the dinner on Saturday evening but this, of course, would be a different operation although I suppose that the Foreign Secretary will be accompanying the Prime Minister to the Summit and so might come down from Paris with her.

*Yours ever,
Philip de Z.*

Dear John,

CONFIDENTIAL

31 JAN 1984

To : Sir Philip de Zulueta

30th January, 1984

From : James Hadley

I went to Lille for the reception and dinner given by Pierre Mauroy to celebrate the exhibition of the BBC French Service's history over the years. A most enchanting time.

The exhibition, in the main and very spacious hall of this fabulous 'art deco' town hall, was very well conceived and constructed. Plenty of video and slide shows - a mock-up of a studio c18th June 1940 - and a cinema.

When I got there, I was immediately 'press-ganged' into a joint radio interview with Pontillon, which went down very well - I think we complemented each other well.

Then Fretwell arrived and we had a few words about sundry matters. The Consul-General, Malcolm Dougal (who was a few years ago in the Commercial Section of the Embassy) was introduced. He is a lively and enthusiastic, and the important Lillois seem to like him.

Mauroy eventually arrived and inspected the exhibition. He was late, but that did not inhibit his enthusiasm, it just destroyed the time-table! Eventually, we went upstairs for a press conference etc. Mauroy was overwhelming in his praise and description of the Franco-British Council - of the representatives there present, ie. Pontillon, the Director from England and his Council colleague Paul Hodgson. Both Paul and I were almost embarrassed at the warmth of his remarks - some of which, were 'off the cuff'. The BBC got, of course, its fair share, and then Mauroy came back to the theme of the absolute necessity of good and developing Franco-British relations. About this time, Michele Cotta arrived to join in the nice words, etc, about the BBC (more of her later). Douglas Muggerridge made a very short speech in the most atrocious, but actually understandable, French (much appreciated) and presented Mauroy with a gold-plated replica of a 1940 microphone, such as were used by de Gaulle. Pontillon then made a first-rate reply on behalf of the Council.

We then had a drink and a few of us went to Mauroy's office to look at some pictures. He was completely relaxed.

Off to the restaurant. I was surprised, but immensely gratified, to find myself sitting on Mauroy's left, with Michele Cotta on his right, and Paul H on her right. Opposite us Pontillon had John Fretwell on his left, but opposite Mauroy. First-rate dinner; plenty of conversation. Mauroy told me that he was very pleased that the region chosen by the Council for its next seminar was the 'Pas de Calais' and the 'Nord' - a singular coincidence!

Sir Philip de Zulueta
30th January, 1984

It turned out that Michele Cotta has her problems, and needed Mauroy's support! He obviously likes her a lot, as do the BBC team, and this is obviously very helpful. Cotta, however, still cannot really understand the role of the IBA (George Thomson must watch out!)

Lots of informal "across the table" talk at dinner. A most successful occasion.

The following, however, are worth noting:

1. The whole dinner, reception etc was given by Mauroy and the City of Lille
2. The BBC exhibition was in the town hall itself, and thus gained prestige
3. The exhibition has another two weeks to go, and expects to attract, "inter alia" a large number of school children.
4. P. Hodgson, who has really been the 'animateur' had to explain to the nice Consul-General that it was the Franco-British Council, not the BBC, that got Mauroy to do this, and not the Embassy - this fact could, I suppose, just cause a little jealousy.
5. Fretwell was pleased to be present, and thanked Mauroy for dinner on behalf of the guests.
6. BBC have worked very hard, and if you could congratulate Douglas Mugeridge (card enclosed) and his colleagues, Andrew Mango, Francois Turmel and Peter Fraenkel, this could be helpful.
7. I will, of course, thank both Mauroy and Pontillon, but a note from you as Chairman to Mauroy might be useful. He can be addressed as Monsieur le Premier Ministre et Maire, L'Hotel de Ville, Lille.
8. Finally, Paul deserves a cheery word for all his work on this. It could never have happened without the Council.

On the Saturday morning, I visited the relatively new store of Marks & Spencer. A most useful and illuminating visit. I am writing to Brian Howard.

MR COLES

Sir Philip de Zulueta telephoned this morning about the possibility of the Prime Minister attending a meeting of the Franco-British Council following the Anglo-French bilaterals at the end of November. He said that he had discussed dates informally with his French opposite number who understood from the Elysee that there were no insuperable obstacles to the bilaterals taking place on 30 November.

I undertook to pass this message on to you. He would be most grateful if you could give him a ring next Wednesday, when he returns from Belgium, about what should happen next. I think he is hoping that we will now be prepared to propose formally to the French Government that the bilaterals should take place at the end of November.

Franco-British Council Conference in 1984

You may remember that the Prime Minister attended and spoke at the two Conferences so far organised by the Council, in Bordeaux (September 1980) and Edinburgh (May 1982). The Council are planning to hold their next Conference in the autumn of 1984 in Toulouse or Marseilles, to coincide with the Anglo/French Summit, also due in France next year. While it is far too early for the Prime Minister to give any commitment about her participation in the conference, the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary wishes to seek her agreement that it should be held before the FCO endorses the Council's plans any further.

It is important for the Council to have this endorsement not only because they require HMG's full backing in organising it, but also because the bulk of the finance for the Conference comes out of an FCO grant-in-aid.

I hope the Prime Minister will agree that these Conferences serve a useful purpose in furthering the specific work of the Council, set up after The Queen's State Visit to France in 1972: in reminding senior personalities on both sides of the Channel, whatever their field of activity, of the importance of France and the UK to each other; and in publicly underlining the commitment of both countries to work for a closer Franco-British relationship. Next year is the 80th anniversary of the Entente Cordiale, and autumn 1984 would be two and a half years after the last Conference.

The Prime Minister will remember the generous style of the Conferences both at Edinburgh and at Bordeaux. There is a feeling both within the FCO and the Quai d'Orsay that some of this might be sacrificed without loss in the interests of economy and of ensuring a more workmanlike atmosphere. However, I fear that some dazzle will remain necessary to attract the participants we would like.

We have yet to work out the financial aspects of the Conference but it would be very useful to know that the Prime Minister is behind us as we do so. The cost to the taxpayer is not yet certain, but may approach £70,000: we shall of course do whatever we can to hold the cost to the lowest possible level.

Sir Philip de Zulueta, Chairman of the British Section of the Council, may also write direct to the Prime Minister on this subject at some stage.

I am sending a copy of this letter to John Kerr at the Treasury.
