You sent us a copy of President Reagan's message to the Prime Minister about her speech to the Scottish Conservative Party Conference in Perth on 11 May.

In advance of the President's visit, the Prime Minister might wish to be aware that Sir Oliver Wright sent the relevant extract of the speech to a number of influential people in Washington, no less than twenty of whom to date, including Mr Shultz, have responded with letters of approval and mutual support.

/ I enclose copies of these messages.

Dear Sir Oliver,

Thank you for your note and the extract from Mrs. Thatcher's speech in Perth, Scotland. Few Americans would quarrel with her thoughts; on the contrary, they would applaud her incisiveness. She articulates, I believe, one of the keys to understanding the American perspective on the U.S.-European relationship. She was obviously well advised by her Ambassador in the United States.

I enjoyed our lunch last Monday. I hope you found our exchange as valuable as I did. Let us meet regularly.

Dear Mr. Ambassador:

Many, many thanks for sending along the comments of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher relative to our relationship with the European community, that she included in her speech delivered to the Conservative Party.

We've always known her to be a stalwart friend of ours and needless to say, it was most reassuring to have her lay it out so succinctly and forcefully as she did in her remarks. I just may be able to use a quote or two at the appropriate time during some of our critical deliberations here in the Congress.

With expressions of highest regard.

Dear Mr. Ambassador:

I wish to thank you for sending me a copy of Prime Minister Thatcher's recent comments on U.S.-British relations. I found her remarks to be additional proof of the steadfast friendship between our two countries.

Mrs. Thatcher's vision of a Europe which seeks greater responsibility in the defense of Western security and our common values and political institutions is a vision which Americans should welcome. The benefits of close U.S. relations with Western Europe, and especially with Great Britain, have been made evident many times since the end of the Second World War. For the American people to see their European allies examine ways to shoulder more responsibility will, I think, reaffirm their belief in the importance of close transatlantic relations.

I appreciated the opportunity to read Mrs. Thatcher's comments before the Perth meeting. I hope you will always feel free to share information on issues of mutual interest. I look forward to seeing you again soon.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 23, 1984

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, one hundred years ago next week, Congress passed a piece of legislation which has brought lasting and continuing benefits to all of the people of our country. That legislation, which was adopted on May 28, 1884, created the Bureau of Animal Industry within the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

That action a century ago was the birth of our formal, organized effort on a national basis to control and eliminate pests and diseases which affect animal health. Our predecessors in the Congress began that effort because they realized its importance to the Nation's farmers and ranchers, and to the consumers of the Nation.

Congress was concerned about animal health a century ago, and it remains concerned today, for two reasons.

First, effective control of livestock pests and diseases means that farmers and ranchers can produce ample supplies and can avoid the heavy costs which diseases and pests can sometimes produce. That means the producer gets a better chance to earn a fair living, and it means the consumer gets adequate supplies at reasonable prices.

Second, effective protection of animal health means more effective protection of human health—both for people who raise and handle livestock, and for the hundreds of millions who consume livestock products.

Since the beginning of this great national effort, the old Bureau of Animal Industry has evolved into a number of successor agencies in the USDA. Some of the work done by the old Bureau is now handled in the Agricultural Research Service... some in the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service... some in the Food Safety and Inspection Service... and some in the Packers and Stockyards Administration. All of those agencies will have parts in special commemorative ceremonies which will be held at the Department of Agriculture on May 29. These are the ceremonies which have helped wipe out many costly and dangerous diseases, such as hoof and mouth disease, and which have helped eradicate or control many serious insect pests.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that I will not be able to attend those ceremonies in person. But, speaking as chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, I want to express our pride in the fact that the USDA has complied over the past century in carrying out our national mandates, to protect animal health. I believe that as we enter the second century of the Department's work, we will continue to protect the health of our Nation's livestock and the health of our Nation's consumers.

Department of Agriculture will continue to respond with the effectiveness the American people have come to expect.

to Congress a report detailing his determinations concerning the procedures, if any, he will utilize in estimating and adjusting for any over or under count in the total population counts for each State in the 1990 census.

Mr. Speaker and Members, promoting greater awareness and cooperation for the 1990 census is important to all of us. Over $100 billion in Federal aid goes to our States and districts based upon the census population count. Likewise, the boundaries of our districts and the apportionment of all legislative districts are determined by these counts.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in helping to improve the accuracy of the 1990 census.

SUPPORT OF H.R. 5617

SPEECH OF

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE

Monday, May 21, 1984

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 5617. While there are many provisions of the bill which are praiseworthy, I would like to direct my remarks today to that section of the bill which resolves a controversial decision by the Veterans Administration to prohibit upright grave markers in new sections of national cemeteries. When this decision was first brought to my attention, I shared the deep sense of disappointment felt by many veterans in my State, a sense that, in the name of some illusory efficiencies of maintenance operation, the Veterans Administration was proposing an action which, both actually and symbolically, denigrated and reduced the honor and respect we owe to our deceased veterans.

Consequently, on November 18, 1982, I introduced a House resolution expressing the sense of the House that the Veterans Administration renew its previous practice of providing upright memorial markers at the graves of veterans buried in national cemeteries. The bill before us today places that sense of the House into actual legislation, making an even stronger statement of purpose, and I applaud its inclusion.

The provision in H.R. 5617 requires that each grave marker provided by the VA in national cemeteries be upright, unless the survivors request that the deceased be buried in a section set aside for graves with flat markers and that the grave be marked with a flat marker.

This requirement is important for two reasons to veterans in my State: one of a practical nature and one of a symbolic nature. Practically, my State is subject to severe winters, and the wind can result in flat markers being

PRIME MINISTER THATCHER SPEAKS OUT FOR EUROPEAN AND AMERICAN COOPERATION

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 23, 1984

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, the British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher last week made comments in a speech to the Conservative Party in Perth which every loyal American must welcome and deeply appreciate. She spoke eloquently of British-American friendship and urged that all of the free world work to improve the cause of freedom and to assist in attacking the causes of tensions and conflicts wherever possible. Here is in part, what she said:

Once we settle Europe's internal problems, Europe can look more to its global responsibilities. We are part of the free world. We must act with the free world. And that means first and foremost, that we should work with our great ally across the Atlantic, the United States. Where would Europe have been in the most difficult and dangerous period after the last war without America? Where would we have been since without America's massive contribution to freedom and security of Europe?

We cannot go on drawing endlessly on American goodwill and generosity without ourselves trying to understand their concerns and the burdens which fall to them. For they are the champions of all the beliefs and ideals which we cherish most deeply.

I believe profoundly that the alliance between Europe and the United States is vital to the defense of the free world. Conservatives will work for a Europe which is a strong partner of the United States and which uses its experience and an increasing part of its resources, to reduce the areas of tension and conflict, to improve the prospects for the poorer countries and to defend and spread beliefs and ideals which are shared by the Western democracies. That is our vision for Europe.

Her training is good for this side of the Atlantic. There is a potential for a coalition between the far left and the far right that could derange Atlantic relations. I trust it will not happen, but it is better not to provoke them to the point of trying it.
