Dear Robin,

When we spoke on the telephone you referred to early January as a possible time for me to see the Prime Minister and I said that was no good because I was going on my summer holiday. On looking at my diary, however, I note that I go on Wednesday January 2 and that I have nothing on Tuesday January 1. Might sometime on January 1 be a starter? As I said, it makes no difference to me where. Alternatively, I leave the country for my holiday at 3.15 p. m. on Wednesday January 2. Might any time before that suit?

May I turn to another matter? She is, I think, going away on or about December 19 and will, presumably, not be in London (if you succeed in your plans) until after Christmas. Bearing in mind, as you told me, that the security arrangements at No. 10 are primarily and rightly concerned with her, would it not be a good idea for the objects to be packed up in tissue paper and put in some container "in the safe" until she returns? If you think this a good idea, I can easily send my private secretary round with the container and some tissue paper.

Please let me know.

*Yours
Victor*
