PRESS DIGESTMain News

The poppier pops say Commons TV is a big yawn, but that verdict is not supported by Mail and qualities.

You win a narrow points victory after a nervous opening.

Queen's Speech generally (apart from Guardian which sees Thatcherism shifting into lower gear) seen as brisk business as usual. quality of life theme comes through strongly and omission of a promise of tax cuts widely noted.

TV critics bring out the importance of the behaviour of those - and in your and Kinnoek's case, Cabinet Ministers - sitting next to you and in camera shot.

"Colour clash" noted - how predominant colour of Tory women MPs was red.

Reports say you are certain to face a challenge for the leadership next month.

Meyer says he will stand if no-one else does, but others are talking of launching another - more substantial - candidate. Express say some fear as many as 60 Tory MPs might abstain. Many Tories predicted your star performance yesterday may yet discourage dissidents from going ahead.

Peter Jenkins, in Independent, says any leadership challenge is more likely to fizzle out than fester, and the end of Thatcherism will not be an event, but rather a gradual process, like convalescence. Referring to the televising of Parliament, he comments that your performance in the House will be a factor in reversing the fortunes of the Government, but performance of the economy will also be important. While Telegraph says a challenge to you is imminent.

Sterling closed yesterday at its lowest level for nearly 3 years as gloom pervades the markets because of concern over tomorrow's trade figures and your political fortunes (Independent).

Express leader headed "How the Tories face losing all" says before a month is out we shall know whether the Tories are paving the way for a fourth election victory or choosing to commit suicide. Your departure would virtually guarantee the loss of the next election no matter who took over the reins.

Delors outlines radical plan for a European Government that would be stronger, more effective and more accountable to European and national parliaments (Times).

Gorbachev backs reform in Czechoslovakia.

Meanwhile Jakes (Czechoslovakia); Zhivkov (Bulgaria) who is expected to be banished to internal exile; and Zaskov (hardline Moscow party chief), who is removed, in trouble.

Czech leader raises hope of power sharing but warns that he did not want anarchy and chaos and there were certain limits beyond which the Government would not go. Meanwhile in East Germany reforms may be slower than expected with Krenz saying free elections would be sometime between the end of 1990 and spring of 1991 (Times).

Independent says Bonn is to hold back aid to East Germany until reforms introduced. There is speculation that Kohl is playing for time on date for proposed German summit, as west Germans believe Krenz will not last long.

Genscher officials say in Washington that the chances of NATO's short-range missiles in Germany being replaced have been killed by events in East Germany (Times).

Genscher has called for a new dynamic in East-West arms control to keep pace with changes in Eastern Europe during visit to Washington - he took a chunk of the Berlin Wall as a gift from West German officials that the upheaval has ruled out any possibility of updating and deploying NATO's short-range missiles in Germany (FT):

Times leader discusses the US defence budget saying pressure to bring troops home from Europe is nothing new. But for Britain, the most Atlantic-minded of the NATO allies, its ability to counter such a trend appears weaker than for many years. You have the clearest view of all NATO leaders of the role of US troops in cementing the alliance and deterring the enemy. But your role in European Councils has become that of the outsider, and your influence over President Bush less than it was with his predecessor.

West Midlands managers claim some ambulance crews are ignoring 999 calls.

Ambulance unions plead with Kenneth Clarke to drop troop plan and go to arbitration.

PRESS DIGEST

Ambulancemen to ban all but accident and emergency work from midnight with no sign of a breakthrough in the increasingly bitter dispute. But Tory dominated West Gerkshire Health Authority has passed motion calling for immediate negotiations "ith recourse to independent arbitration". Police and army vehicles mobilised again yesterday in London (Independent).

Express feature accuses scribblers and economists for collectively trying to talk the country into a full blown recession. And it praises John Banham, CBI for attacking the "lemming tendency". Many businessmen share his view.

8 of the world's leading chemical firms joining forces to find a substitute for CFCs (Independent).

BAA says Prestwick may face closure if it loses its exclusive position as Scotland's international gateway (Times).

SMMT says Britain's leading exporters could move factories to Northern France unless something is done about road congestion.

BR chairman says senior management in disarray because difficulty Government is having in finding a replacement for him (Times).

TSB to reduce staff by 5,000 over next 4 years.

Domestic electricity prices to be frozen for 3 years under deal between British Coal and electricity industry.

CEGB to press ahead with application to build Hinkley C nuclear power plant, arguing that there are advantages to finishing the inquiry even though immediate construction no longer on the cards. Independent Science Editor says sorry story of nuclear power in UK is classic illustration of inability of Government, industry and financial institutions to cope with complexities of today's high technology.

Peter Brooke says the IRA will never win, making a renewed attempt to restore faith in anti-terrorist fight (Times).

PRESS DIGESTCOMMONS TV

Star - So boring Commons gets on your box - voted a yawn. TV appraisal: It's jaw and disorder.

Sun - Commons TV voted big yawn. Unlikely to topple Coronation Street from the top of the ratings. Leader: Commons TV will never be a hit. The result of MPs protective rules is dull, sanitised, misleading dishonest. Dallas without JR.

Sun also lets TV critics and fashion writers loose on Commons - one says you were masterful and another says Tories won fashion stakes with you a knockout. But they don't think much of it as TV.

Mirror leads with "Sir Geoffrey nods off in front of Commons cameras" - thereby "upstaging" you. Pages 2&3 - It's welcome to the Neil, Maggie, Edwina and woolly sheep helmet show - no sex, just a lot of rhubarb, rhubarb. TV critic says Kinnock got going in his usual manner of auditioning for an Eisteddfod and your speech came as an enormous relief. You were brusque and bright.

Today leads with John Major stifling a yawn while you are talking, under heading "What Chancellor thought of the new show. Wake up you're on TV". One big yawn", its TV critic concludes. Political correspondent says you abandoned your abrasive style and oozed grace and modesty.

Leader says that although they have passionately supported Commons TV they have the nasty morning after feeling that they may have backed a flop. but in the long run it must force reform.

Express says most believed Commons TV was a great turn off. Edward Pearce says you are over acting to camera, but you were steadily improving, softer, quieter and sweeter than you have been for some time.

Mail p1 lead - The Maggie and Neil Show. More dynamic than many broadcasters dare hope. And far better than most politicians feared. Yours was a characteristic gritty performance, but fine tuned for TV, Kinnock equally impressive. TV critic, Peter Paterson, says it was hardly ever boring. Kinnock seemed more at ease than you. After a nervous start you almost invited Labour MPs to interrupt and the affect contradicted the image of an authoritative steam rolling Prime Minister but also undermined the image of strength you like to convey. but on TV you were more human.

Colin Welch says you won on points.

PRESS DIGEST

Mail p2 - Maggie blueprint to build on years of success. A powerful programme of action. Pages 16&17 - Green light for '90s revolution. Leader says that against against a demoralising background the Prime Minister has done the only sensible thing, sounded the advance. It's business as usual - and no slacking on the Tory backbenches.

Times says consensus among MPs is that Kinnock won first round in the televising of Parliament. Leader says both you and Kinnock were in singularly emollient form. Seldom, if ever, has either give way to more interventions from backbenchers.

FT - Both you and Kinnock appeared to tailor your performances to suit television and were markedly more reserved than in recent clashes during Question Time (FT).

As Neil Kinnock got into his stride, flinging scornful phrases acrosss the table, the magic of the old cockpit began to seep out the screen straight into the sitting room (FT).

You scored by giving way gracefull to the Opposition who too late discovered your skill at massive retaliation.

FT leader says of televising of the House that it showed that the fate of the Government will be decided by television - and the conduct of the next election will almost certainly be tailored to the TV cameras.

On yesterday it says you were not at your best in an immediate combative response but showed your most outstanding qualities and a smiling courtesy when delivering your address.

Independent leader says you, as usual, out-performed Mr Kinnock in yesterday's televised debate. Given less unitywithint he Party, and that the Tories majority in the Commons is the foundation of your power, dissension within the ranks is the most dangerous threat of all. But the performance of the economy will have the most effect on theGovernment's prospects, more than the legislation outlined yesterday.

Telegraph - You adopted a more relaxed and conciliatory style and gave way 13 times. Sketchwriter says stage struck MPs revel in role of star performers on box. It was not Kinock of the Dispatch Box but Kinnock of the conference platform. This was Thatcher not of the Despatch Box, not of the conference platform, but of the peak rate, long distance telephone call. You also showed alarming amounts of courtesy clearly loving it.

PRESS DIGEST

Guardian political correspondent says Kinnock seemed to win the instant TV ratings war. Leader says rarely have you emerged with so vibrant with sweet reason.

QUEEN'S SPEECH

Star p4 - Hope of greener, greater Britain. Channel 5 gets into the picture. Leader says there was plenty of stick in the new policies but not a shred of carrot. What people really want is a prosperous, booming Britain which gives us opportunities for all. That's what this Government used to be good at. Where has it all gone wrong.

Sun p2 - You are all £55 a week better off. Maggie in TV blast. It describes you as Commons TV star. Leader headed "You've never had it so good" says you did not look embattled or under challenge and you gloried in your Government's record. It is disappointed further tax cuts have been postponed - not for long, it hopes. But despite economic problems the Government, under you, is still on course for prosperity.

Mirror p2 - Tories Tough Time Ahead.

Today p4 - 2p tax sting by Maggie the charmer. that is its forecast of income tax rise. Inside pages 14&15 give extensive coverage to the Queen's Speech provisions.

Express p7 - Thatcher has her sights set on shake up and good life for all. All systems go as crusade continues.

Times p1 - Quality of life is the theme of what would be the last full Parliamentary session before a 1991 General Election. Leader says on the whole it is a programme likely to be less onerous than in most recent sessions but the most important test for the Government will be whether it can halt inflation without recession.

Robin Oakley assessing the Government's new programme in the Times describes it as radicalism in soft focus.

FT leads with Thatcher softens line on EC. It suggests a Strasbourg rift may be averted as you adopted a more emollient tone in the House yesterday on negotiations with EC partners over the Social Charter and EMU. You put inflation before tax cuts as top priority - dropping the now traditional reference to tax cuts from the Speech.

PRESS DIGEST

Independent identifies key areas of controversy; the creation of an internal NHS market and overhaul of the legal profession. Elsewhere the paper comments that the Green Bill, long seen as overdue, is predistined to be seen only as a catching-up operation, and thus a disappointment to environmental groups.

Independent - You defend Britain's frequent isolation in internatioanl affairs. The theme of your speech was that this Government had turned the country round from the socialist decline of the 1970s to make the 1980s a decade of strength and pride.

Telegraph leads with Quality of life issues at top of Tory agenda. Promises of tax cuts omitted from queen's Speech. Leaderheaded "A heavy programme" says those who wanted an easier pace could have saved their breath. It reflects your conviction, which it shares, that a tremendous amount remains to be done to bring this country up tot he mark. The heaviest responsibility rests on the Minister without a radical reform measure - the Chancellor.

Guardian p1 lead "Thatcherims shifts to low gear", signalling a retreat from the Thatcherite agenda to calmer waters of wider consumer choice and quality of life.

Guardian says the juggernaut rolls on yet the brake lights are being gently applied.
