TELEPHONE CALL WITH PRESIDENT MITTERRAND

President Mitterrand has asked to talk to you on the telephone tomorrow. We have suggested it be between 1230/1300 to minimise disruption to your speech writing. His office are very cagey about the subject and will only say that it is defence.

It may be relevant that George Younger was in Paris yesterday seeing his opposite number.

Those to whom I have talked are puzzled about what the subject can be. Possibilities which occur to me are:

- (i) some general concern about American intentions on arms control i.e. that they might be reverting to Reykjavik-type proposals. But Bush's visit yesterday should have reassured them;
- (ii) concern about the German desire to press ahead with reductions in short-range systems. But this is not new;
- (iii) a general talk about Anglo-French defence cooperation, to balance the recent Franco-German initiatives i.e. the joint Brigade;
- (iv) specific thoughts on Anglo-French nuclear cooperation. There was a major leak in the Times this week of the fact that we were talking to the French about limited cooperation. The leak came from the French, and may have been a misguided attempt to balance talk of Franco-German cooperation in other fields;
- (v) the French seem keen to use the WEU as a forum to discuss cooperation between European naval forces in the Gulf. We are not very keen: practical coordination can best be done on the spot;
